

Mejelle: A Complete Code of Islamic Civil Law

The Mejelle Ahkame Adliye was elaborated between 1869 and 1876 as part of the legislative purpose of the Tanzimat, initiated in imperial Turkey, with the approval of the Sultan. The Mejelle represents an attempt to codify that part of Hanafi Fiqh which treats of muamalat (transactions between people) and to present the Islamic law of obligations in one volume for facility of consultation. In recent decades the Mejelle has gained fresh attention as seen in the codification of the new Civil Code of the United Arab Emirates in 1985. Equally many research works have been undertaken to examine the provisions contained in the Mejelle and the extent of compatibility of the current civil codes of many Muslim countries. Though intended to be a code of law, the judges of the Mejelle period were not strictly obliged to adhere to all provisions documented in it. They were left free to form their own opinions as a result of the study of the Hanafi Law books, and this compilation was used as a guide and a useful book of reference. And therein lies its principal value even today.
