

Longing for the Wild

Longing for the Wild describes the journey of a woman struggling with and eventually falling into the masterpiece of life and discovering the extraordinary strength and wisdom innate in everyone--our Buddha nature, our Christ consciousness, our higher selves, our essence as Spirit. Crises provide the opportunity for opening to these resources, but it is surrender--the quiet in between the crises, being mindful and paying attention--that prepares all of us for the moments in which we move deeper into our true selves. The general restlessness and unease so many modern people feel can be attributed to a longing for our essential human nature, our elemental connection with the wild. The wild is not only out there; it is the foundation of human consciousness. We are inherently wild beings. The human longing to reconnect with our wildness has been all but lost in this age of the overwhelming distractions of technology and information overload. This book is a mirror of a million works-in-progress. The readers own path is illuminated during the journey of the authors unique safari into the deeper realms of being human.
